A phone app that listens to your car and could warn of impending trouble

Since it uses the phone's sensors, there's no risk someone can hack your car.

JENNIFER M. GILBY — 10/27/2017, 12:50 PM

Example / MIT researchers are working on an app that uses a smartphone's microphone and accelerometers to diagnose impending maintenance problems.

The Construction Quality Assessment System (CONQUAS), introduced in Singapore since 1989, serves as a national standard for assessing the quality of building projects.

CONQUAS® was designed with three objectives:

1. To have a standard quality assessment system for construction projects
2. To make quality assessment objective by measuring constructed works against workmanship standards and specification, and using a sampling approach to suitably represent the whole project
3. To enable quality assessment to be carried out systematically, within reasonable cost and time
